Severe Weather Outlook Friday, April 16, 2021

Hazardous Weather

Storm chances will continue today ahead of a strong cold front that will move through. Showers and thunderstorms will increase in coverage through the morning hours and continue until a cold front moves through during the afternoon. A strong or severe storm with hail is possible across much of the area during the day, but the threat for large hail will remain isolated. Breezy northwest winds and cooler air will move in behind the front and bring an end to the rain/storms. Tonight's lows will mainly be in the 40s.

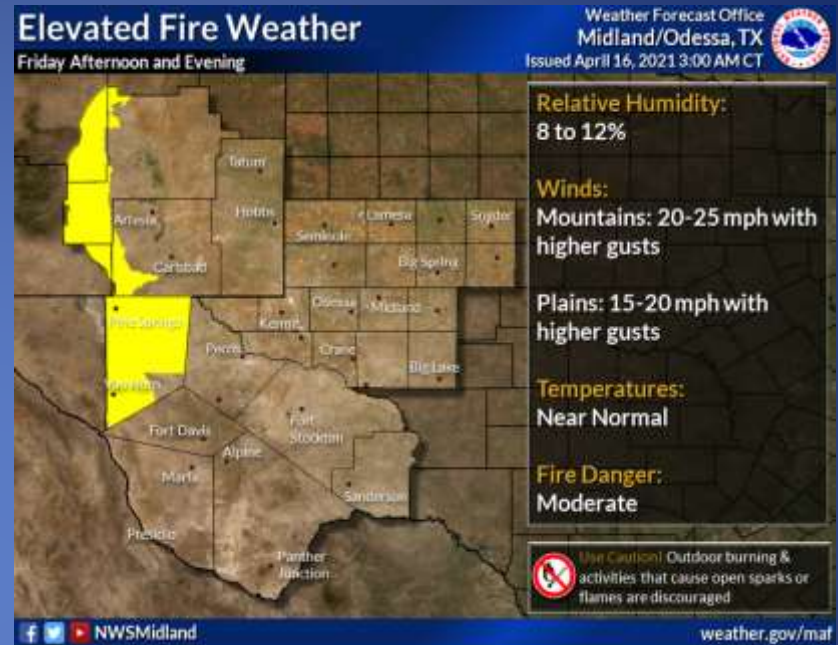

There is a risk for a few isolated severe thunderstorms today and tonight southwest of a line from Winnsboro, TX, to Shreveport, to Clarks, LA. Large hail and damaging winds will be the primary threats.

Hazardous Weather

Isolated showers and thunderstorms will be possible throughout today as an upper level disturbance and then a cold front traverse across the state. A few of the storms could be strong to severe, with the main hazard being large hail. Cooler temperatures and breezy conditions arrive behind the front this evening.

Please refrain from burning if you are in the targeted area this afternoon and evening!

Hazardous Weather

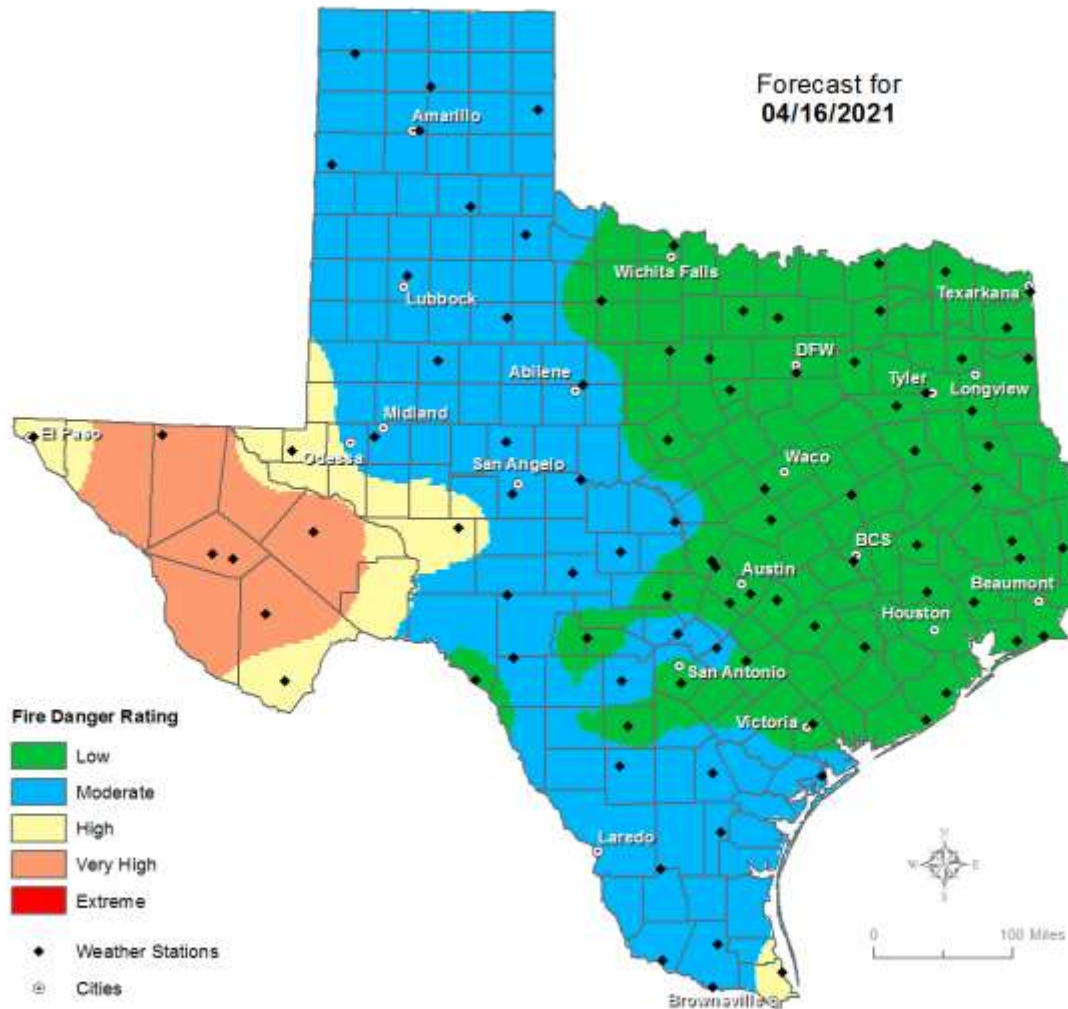

High Wind Warning has been issued for Guadalupe Pass for late tonight into Saturday morning.
